- Key Experiments, Evaluation, and Takeaways:

  1. Inverted Index Construction

Experiment: Enhanced the inverted index from assignment 3 to better suit our environment and optimizing text processing by using stemming and lemmatization (from various packages). This process involved developing separate indexes for document body and title - each with tailored processing techniques to improve search efficiency. Additionally, we tried to integrate dictionary structures for fast data retrieval and pre-calculated BM_25 ranking components within the index to expedite query processing (PageRank, document length and title length).

Evaluation: Focused on the balance between computational efficiency and cluster restrictions in gcp. Assessed the retrieval speed and accuracy in finding relevant documents - using the platform provided to us.

Findings: The optimized inverted index significantly improved retrieval speeds and provided a robust structure for our search engine.

- Leveraging dictionaries within the index significantly streamlined the querying process, offering quicker access to relevant data.

- The efforts to embed BM25 rankings in posting lists, failed due to multiple setbacks, leading to its abandonment due to time constraints.

- Among various stemming approaches, Porter Stemming emerged as the most effective, optimizing speed without compromising accuracy, whereas lemmatization impacting index construction time adversely.

- We build indexes for title and body and the dictionaries mentioned above.

2. PageRank Experimentation

Experiment: Implemented PageRank to assess the impact of link structures on document relevance, expecting to enhance search results through hyperlink analysis.

Evaluation: Explored the influence of PageRank on search result relevance, with a focus on the potential importance indicated by link popularity.

Findings: The integration of PageRank introduced a new dimension to sorting search results. However, its contribution to enhancing result quality was minimal when not used jointly with the title and body. This outcome highlights the value in combining content relevance with link-based popularity in determining the utility of search results.

3. Backend Search and Ranking Experimentation with PageRank Integration

Experiment: Evaluated the combined effect of ranking algorithms (TF-IDF, TF, and BM-25) and PageRank on search relevance and accuracy.

Evaluation: comparing each algorithm's performance based on its ability to enhance the relevance and precision of search results, focusing on improving the first 5 and 30 results that the engine returns.

Findings:

-Body Text: BM25 significantly outperformed others methods, enhancing search relevance due to its advanced treatment of term frequency and document length, especially with the combination of the stemming we implemented.

-Titles: Despite the brevity of titles, which might suggest simpler algorithms could suffice, BM25 still emerged as the superior choice.

- Incorporating PageRank by multiplying the scores with the best 60 scores from the BM25 results further enhanced the relevance. We found that merely combining these methods led to suboptimal outcomes, while employing multiplication significantly enhanced the model's performance.
4. Experiments on Runtime Improvement:

Experiment: To enhance overall runtime, particularly in our main search function during a query, we conducted experiments focused on multithreading and using map-reduce of pySpark. Our approach aimed to leverage parallel processing to reduce query execution time significantly. Threads allowed concurrent execution of BM-25 calculations on both titles and bodies. Also, parallel term analysis within the function and loading posting lists .
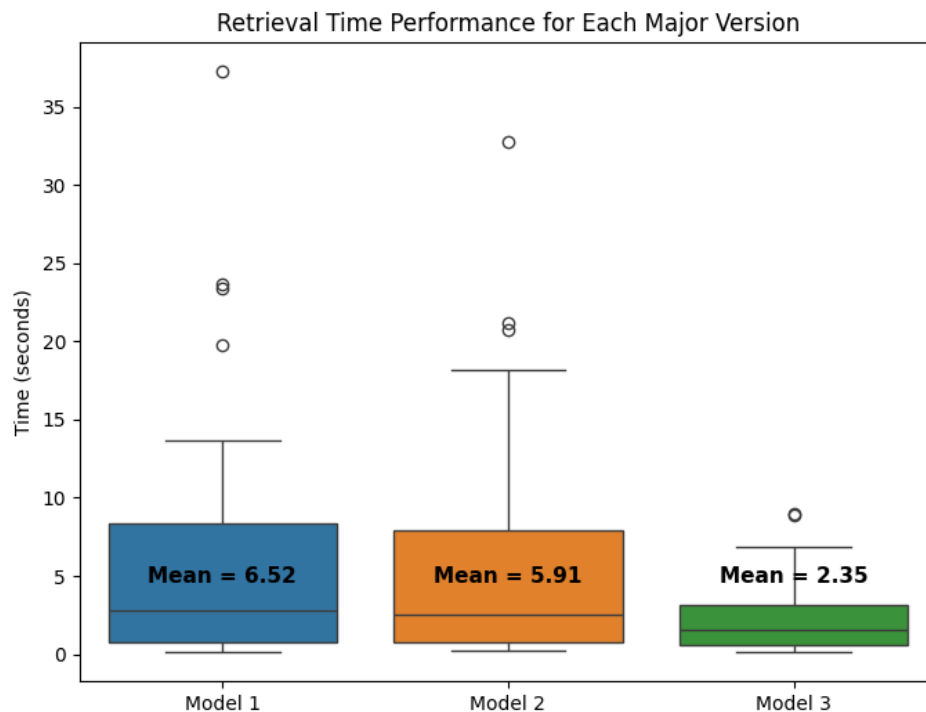

Evaluation: We compared the execution time of search queries with and without multithreading, using a consistent set of queries to ensure fairness in the assessment.

Findings: Using multithreading optimized system efficiency, offering faster responses to user queries while maintaining search accuracy. This improved our average run times by more than half (we used ThreadPoolExecutor from the concurrent library).

- Major versions of our implementation:
    1. TF ranking for title and BM25 ranking for body, normalized.
    2. BM25 ranking for body and title indexes with weights of 0.4 and 0.6, respectively.
    3. BM25 ranking for body and title indexes, with weights of 0.4 and 0.6 respectively, multiplied by the result of PageRank - Our final model version.

- Average Retrieval Time Graph:

- Qualitative Evaluation of Search Results:
- Bad query results to: "When was the United Nations founded?"

The stemming process led to retrieving very common words like "found," which are associated with posting lists of over a million per word, this inflated the search results with irrelevant content. The search failed to recognize "United Nations" as a combined entity. This demonstrates the importance of handling key phrases as units rather than disjointed words and of enhancing query understanding. We can do it by incorporate natural language processing (NLP) techniques to better understand query context and relationships between terms.

- Good query results to: "What is the meaning of the term 'Habeas Corpus'?"

This query succeeded largely because "Habeas Corpus" consists of terms that are rare in the corpus, allowing the search engine to efficiently zero in on highly relevant documents. The rarity of the terms in the corpus meant less noise in the search results and a higher precision in matching the query intent.
